Occurrence and source apportionment of volatile organic compounds in Yongningwanshan National Natural Reserve, China. A study was conducted to investigate the temporal variations and seasonal variations of volatile organic compound (VOC) composition in the atmosphere of Yongningwanshan National Natural Reserve (YNNNR) located in Sichuan, China. The temporal variations of the major VOCs in the surface air were investigated from April 2009 to March 2011. The time series analysis of VOCs concentrations presented a seasonal pattern with a mean concentration in the winter months (December - February) higher than in the summer months (June - August). The highest concentrations of benzene, toluene, ethylbenzene and xylenes (BTEX) were observed in September and remained at high concentrations during winter. The concentrations of these VOCs in the study area were in the ranges of 80-260 ng/m³, 100-390 ng/m³, 80-250 ng/m³ and 45-250 ng/m³ in summer, autumn, winter and spring, respectively. The major sources of the VOCs in the air were identified by the positive matrix factorization model (PMF), and analysis of differential VOC sources was conducted by the signal-to-noise ratio (SNR) of the VOCs.
